A Talk About Hams!

In order to make a good Ham what has to be done? Well, in the first place the best kind of a pig to cut Hams from is a nice corn-fed Vermont porker. Those are the kind we use.

Then, after you've got the right sort of pork, the rest of it all depends on the way it is cured. Now everybody doesn't know how to cure a Ham—in fact every market-man doesn't know how to cure one right. It takes years of experience to learn just how strong to make the brine in which the Hams are pickled, just how long to smoke them and do the rest of the curing.

The men that cure our Hams know how. They've learned by years of practical work.
